Great Voting Contest

Elegant Obermyer & Sons Piano and Other Valuable Prizes to be Awarded to the Successful Candidates

THE TRANSCRIPT AND MIDDLETOWN MERCHANTS GIVE PRIZES

Read the Announcement and Particulars on Third Page of This Issue, and get in the Game

The Transcript this week inaugurates the greatest voting contest ever held in this section of the state, and one which we believe will extend a great deal of interest.

This contest will extend over a period of about 90 days, and at the close of the contest, some lady in Middletown or vicinity will be the proud possessor of a handsome $400 piano.

On another page of this issue will be found a full explanation of the contest, with the rules which will govern it, and a list of beautiful and useful auxiliary prizes which will be given by the progress merchants of the village. There was a great number of prizes, besides the piano, any one of which will be well worth winning, and every contestant who gets out and makes any kind of a hustle will be sure of winning a handsome prize, even if she does not win the piano.

This contest is put on under the auspices of the Publisher's Music Co. of Chicago, who will have charge of the arrangements. This company makes a business of conducting these popular voting contests and at present has a number of them under way in this and other states.

Some popular lady will have a beautiful piano as the result of this contest, and a number of others will have beautiful prizes of various kinds.

Read the rules elsewhere in this issue, inspect the offerings of the merchants, and learn how you may secure votes for yourselves or friends.

Use the 25-vote coupon in this issue and cast it for some one, as it may be the starter of a winner. Fill out the nominating coupon.

NEW YORK FASHIONS

New York, April. Fussy taffeta frocks and suits of this and other silk are a feature notable wherever the well dressed assemble. Changeableness are a veritable craze and are used not only for frocks and hats and their trimmings but for bags, linings, scarfs and coats.

The New "Quaker Bag"

The new Quaker Bag is in long saddle bag style with rings in the center to close it is not only in silks but in English Morocco. This bag opens at both ends where gilt frames and secure fastenings hold it for the closing hand downward in carrying. One end holds the purse and the other the vanity fittings, between the two, in the center, are the rings and chain for carrying. In leather this style costs $10, in moire less, while in white pique trimmed with lace and fringe it can be had at a very moderate figure.

Neck and Sleeve Fixings

Hand embroidered Quaker collars and cuffs edged with Irish or Cluny lace are fashionably worn, and frills of hemstitched lawn or fine net finish most of the three quarter sleeves that are popular for both tailored frocks and coats. These ruffles can be bought with rubber ribbon fitting them to the arm which saves sewing in. Macramé lace for waist trimmings in bands and collars and cuff shapes is well endorsed and is most often used with decidedly contrasting textures.

A waist of fine Brussels net will be dressed up with the heavy lace, or it will relieve the flat look of taffeta or satin. Girdles or velvet ribbon that tie once and have the ends weighted with fringe or other dangles, and similar contraptions of silk or satin are universally worn. Very fancy belts of leather in two colors or soft crushable styles are also desirable additions now that the shirt waist season is upon us.

New Waists

Severely tailored shirt waists in washable silks are in excellent vogue. These have soft, close fitting collars of the material closed with links to match those in the turned back cuff of similar shape which finishes the sleeve. White satin

USEFUL THINGS TO KNOW

Dish cloths should be kept scrupulously clean by washing thoroughly in soap and water, well rinsed and hung in the air after using.

An ordinary brick is excellent for an iron stand and if heated before using the iron will keep hot much longer than with the common iron stand.

A cheerful cook makes a fine dessert. Stir a smile into the pudding. "I forget"—spilled the broth. Flavor the salad with the oil of kind-ness.

Guess—and ruin the cake. Cleanliness is godliness. Nature is clean. A merry heart makes light pastry. Clean hands and light tread.

For cleaning brass and silverware: Half a cup of whitening then fill the cup up with cold water. Pour this mixture into a bottle and add one ounce of ammonia. Shake well before using. Wet a flannel cloth with this, then rub the article to be cleaned, afterwards rubbing dry till polished.

(For one pound of meat poulticed to a paste.) Use one level tablespoonful of pepper, one half teaspoonful of allspice.

Elasticity is restored to rubber by soaking it in one part ammonia and two parts clear water until the desired results are obtained. This is especially true in the case of rings or other articles that have become stiff and brittle.

There are many ways of getting rid of mice, but try this: When mice trouble you, hunt out their entrances to pantry or cupboard and plaster them with a mixture of melted (just soft) laundry soap and red pepper. They will not come again.

Take old fruit jar rubbers, break into bits and hold over a hot fire on a shovel until it is "rubbery;" then, with a broad-bladed knife spread quickly over the leak. Wet your finger and rub till smooth. I have mended hot-water bottles the same way.

An old teapot is one of the best things to use for putting paraffin on jellies or preserves. Place the teapot into which you have put the paraffin on the stove, and when melted pour over the jelly. Stand the teapot away and it is ready for future use.

To clean hair brushes use soda dissolved in cold water, wash water and soap very often soften the bristles and rubbing completes their destruction. Avoid setting the brushes near the fire or in the hot sun to dry, as this causes the bristles to lose their straightness; shake them well and dry in the fresh air.

Take the fat skimmed from boiled fowl and let it stand in a cold place till hard. When solid put it in hot water and boil for a short time to refine it. Strain and chill again so that the fat can be taken up clean and hard. Used with an equal quantity of lard and a little salt this makes fine pie crust. It is also a good substitute for butter in cookies, and cake especially, when fruit and spices are used.

If the regulation ice bowl with hole for drippings is too expensive, try this for home use: Get a wire croquette basket, with loose wire handle, which may be removed. Place this in a fancy bowl of glass or china, using one that is rounded at the bottom, so that there will be a space under the flat basket to hold the water. Half the usual quantity of ice generally used will be saved, and the basket keeps bright with very little attention.

China on which is gilt decoration should not be washed in strong soap suds or water, containing washing powder.

In washing ordinary china the hotter the water the more easily the pieces will dry and the brighter they will be.

Food experts tell us that uncooked sour kraut is a splendid broom for the alimentary canal, as it cleanses away the decay microbes. Butter milk and sour milk are both valuable as cleansers for the system.

When roses or other cut flowers are to be kept, an excellent way is to put the stems into cold water in a deep bedroom pitcher, wrap the stems and flowers with dampened newspaper. Keeping the air from the flowers is the real secret and having them damp and cool.

Boiled mutton is improved by the addition of an onion and a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce.

In cooking vegetables of all kinds, a wire frying basket is a great convenience, as the vegetables may be removed quickly and dried out, or if the water does not boil away they have a little time before scorching to be discovered.

The John Deere Riding Gang Plow

This is the plow that runs so light, and so easy to handle. We sold 14 of these plows in 1911 to the following farmers, and if you are going to buy a gang plow this season would like you to ask any of the 14 what they think of it, and we feel sure you will have more praise from these 14 users than it would be possible to hear from any 14 men who have used any other make of gang plow: Frank S. Clayton, Chesapeake City, Md.; Edgar C. Ellison, Chesapeake City, Md.; Samuel F. Jones, Mt. Pleasant; Abram Jones, Port Penn; F. E. Walker, Delaware City; Edgar Carrow, St. Georges; Archie W. Biggs, Earleville, Md.; Chas. P. Spicer, Richard Whiteoak, Middletown; J. P. Algire, Middletown; Howard Cullen, St. Georges; Samuel McGill, Earleville, Md.; R. G. Buckworth, Middletown; Eugene Paxon, Middletown.

We sell them guaranteed to run lighter to 4 horses than any 3 horse plow does to 3 horses and to do perfect work in every particular.

Howard Witt, a Milford merchant, has on exhibition in his store a china plate said to be 130 years old, bearing on a blue background a picture of the Pennsylvania Hospital, the first hospital built in Philadelphia.

Whip Cords and Serges

Whipcords and serges are the materials most employed for wool tailored attire and every woman who can compass it is having as many white serge costumes as her purse or needs permit. These are so useful and becoming if well selected that their popularity is easily understood. Wool fringe is used considerably as a trimming but discreetly. If it follows the overskirt lines that run in the fashionable diagonal on the skirt the lapels and sleeve cuffs are apt to want it, and be finished in broadcloth or ribbed facings of silk, wool or cotton corduroy or terry cloth. Figured pongs printed in dull tones of red or blue makes effective revers and sleeve facings.

White Skirt and Colored Coat

A white skirt worn with a colored coat is one of the present fads and coats of this sort are apt to be built either on Blazer or Norfolk lines. Blue coats are first favorites, but black and other tones are permissible if preferred. The dark coats, usually have white facings and buttons and is often outlined with the heavy cording which is one of the late wrinkles.

THAT "WOOLLY" WEST
Here we have a sample of the "dooin's" of one of those half barbaric Western States that are opposing our good, Trust-loving president Mr. Taft.

Out in crazy Kansas they have put 74 "wimmin" in office, 45 county school superintendents, five county clerks, six county treasurers, six district court clerks, ten registrars of deeds and two Probate Judges. Think of all that impractical nonsense of putting 74 women in office, thereby displacing 74 able-bodied "male" heelers—cutting off not only their salaries but their official "pickings" also.

Small wonder such "wild Western cattle" can't appreciate a president advised and steered by such choice statesmen and unselfish patriots as Boies Penrose, Joe Cannon, Guggenheim, Aldrich and the rest.

But this same "woolly West" also offers a conclusive illustration why women are not fit to vote or hold office. Investigation shows that among these 74 women office-holders out in Kansas "there has never been a single case of dishonesty, and they have all performed their duties properly and efficiently." Actually ain't got gumption enough to boodle a bit! Women know enough to vote or hold office—certainly not!

Sunday's Wind Damage

Sunday afternoon during the height of the storm that struck this section hard, the big silo of Mr. John C. Alston was blown down and totally destroyed, a part of it falling upon a cow stable in which a number of colored men were milking at the time. They say some of the boys were scared almost white—thought the crack of doom had certainly struck them, and they promptly fell to praying so earnestly and loudly that their vociferous orisons could be heard for a quarter of a mile even amid the howling of the elements and the miscellaneous racket all around them.

Mr. Alston also had three large apple-trees uprooted and three more badly twisted in their tops by the violence of the wind.

TO-NIGHT! IN FRONTIER DAYS

Criticism of The Moving Picture World, October 26th.—No one can question the excitement which this picture causes. The Indians bear down upon a party of emigrants making their way over the plains in wagons. And a wild dash for safety begins. There is such riding as is seldom seldom seen, even in a film. Then comes a lively fight, with a thrilling rescue which results in driving the besieging Indians away. The details are carefully worked out and the film is satisfactory in every way. In one theater where this picture was seen the enthusiasm of the audience burst all bounds.

FIVE REASONS WHY Indiana Silos ARE POPULAR

1.—Indiana Silos are best by test—the test of service and the test of results.

2.—Indiana Silos are fully guaranteed, both as to material and lasting qualities. If erected under our instruction and properly cared for, will last a lifetime.

3.—Indiana Silos are built of Yellow Pine in one-piece staves up to 24 feet; in Oregon Fir in one-piece staves up to 32 feet. In no height is there more than one splice to a stave.

4.—Indiana Silos, when built in two-piece staves are constructed with an end-matched, self-draining wood joint which will not rot or rust out in a short time, and which is patented and used only in Indiana Silos.

5.—Indiana Silos are sold on their merits, and the INDIANA SILO COMPANY stands back of all sales whether made direct or through agents.

I have secured the agency for the Indiana Silo Co., and would be glad to talk with any of our dairy-men interested in same.

CHAPTER IX.

"Over the Hills and Far Away."

Recognition—or some other more potent instantaneous force—brought the woman to a sitting position. The man drew back to give her freedom of action, as she lifted herself on her hands. It was moments before complete consciousness of her situation came to her. The surprise was yet too great, she saw things dimly through a whirl of driving rain, of a rushing night wind, of a seething sea of water, but presently it was all plain to her again. She had caught no fair view of the man who had shot the bear as he splashed through the creek and tramped across the rocks and trees down the hill full face, but she had not seen him full face, but she recognized him immediately. The thought tinged with color for a moment her pallid cheek.

"I fell into the torrent," she said feebly, putting her hand to her head and striving by speech to put aside that awful remembrance.

"You didn't fall in," was the answer, "it was a cloudburst, you were caught in it."

"I didn't know."

"Of course not, how should you?"

"And how came I here?"

"I was lucky enough to pull you out."

"Did you jump into the flood for me?"

The man nodded.

"That's twice you have saved my life this day," she said, forcing herself, womanlike, to the topic that she hated.

"It's nothing," deprecated the other.

"It may be nothing to you, but it is a great deal to me," was the answer. "And now what is to be done?"

"We must get out of here at once," said the man. "You need shelter, food, a fire. Can you walk?"

"I don't know."

"Let me help you." He rose to his feet, reached down to her, took her hands in the grasp of his own and raised her lightly to her feet in an effortless way which showed his great strength. She did not more than put the weight of her body slightly on her left foot when a spasm of pain shot through her, she swayed and would have fallen had he not caught her. He sat her gently on the rock.

"My foot," she said pitiously. "I don't know what's the matter with it."

Her high boots were tightly laced, of course, but he could see that her left foot had been badly mauled or sprained; already the slender ankle was swelling visibly. He examined it swiftly a moment. It might be a sprain, it might be the result of some violent thrust against the rocks, some whirling tree trunk might have caught and crushed her foot, but there was no good in speculating as to causes, the present patent fact was that she could not walk; all the rest was at that moment unimportant.

This unfortunate accident made him the more anxious to get her to a place of shelter without delay. It would be necessary to take off her boot and give the wounded member proper treatment. For the present the tight shoe acted as a bandage, which was well.

When the man had withdrawn himself from the world, he had inwardly resolved that no human being should ever invade his domain or share his solitude, and during his long sojourn in the wilderness his determination had not weakened. Now his coming desire was to get this woman whose fortune—good or ill—had thrown upon his hands to his house without delay. There was nothing he could do for her out there in the rain. Every drop of whiskey was gone, they were just two half-drowned, sodden bits of humanity cast up on that rocky shore, and one was a helpless woman.

"Do you know where your camp is?" he asked at last.

He did not wish to take her to her own camp, he had a strange instinct of possession in her. In some way he felt he had obtained a right to deal with her as he would, he had saved her life twice, once by chance, the other as the result of the state and heroic endeavor, and yet his honor and his manhood obliged him to offer to take her to her own people if he could. Hence the question, the answer to which he waited so eagerly.

"It's down the canon," said one of Mr. Robert Matfield's party.

The man nodded, he didn't know Robert Matfield from Adam, and he cared nothing about him.

"How far down?" he asked.

"I don't know, how far is it from here to where you—where—where—"

"About a mile," he replied, quickly fully understanding her reason for faltering.

"Then I think I must have come at least five miles from the camp this morning."

"It will be four miles away, then," said the man.

The girl nodded.

"I couldn't carry you that far," he murmured half to himself; "I question if there is any camp left there any way. Where was it, down by the water's edge?"

"Yes."

"Every vestige will have been swept away by that, look at it," he pointed over to the hill where the storm was passing.

"What must we do?" she asked instantly, depending upon his greater strength, his larger experience, his masculine force.

"I shall have to take you to my camp."

"Is it far?"

"About a mile or a mile and a half from here."

"I can't walk that far."

"No, I suppose not. You wouldn't be willing to stay here while I went down and hunted for your camp?"

The girl clutched at him.

"I couldn't be left here for a moment alone," she said in sudden fever of alarm. "I never was afraid before, but now—"

"All right," he said, gently patting

uneasy troubled sleep. He did not know whether she slumbered or whether she had fainted again. He did not dare to stop to find out, his strength was almost spent; in this last effort the strain upon his muscles was almost as great as it had been in the whirlpool. For the second time that day he stood out on his forehead, his legs trembled under him. How he made the last five hundred feet up the steep wall to a certain broad shelf perhaps an acre in extent where he had built his hut among the mountains, he never knew, but the last remnant of his force was spent when he finally opened the unwatched door with his foot, carried her in the log hut and laid her upon the bed or bunk built against one wall of the cabin.

By the way he put her down was characteristic of the man. That last vestige of strength had served him well. He did not drop her as a less thoughtful and less determined man might have done, he laid her there as gently and tenderly as if she weighed nothing, and as if he had carried her nowhere. So quiet and easy was his handling of her that she did not wake up at once.

So soon as she was out of his arms, he stood up and stared at her in great alarm, which soon gave way to reassurance. She had not fainted, there was a little tinge of color in her cheek that had rubbed up against his rough hunting coat; she was asleep, her regular breathing told him that. Sleep was of course the very best of medicines for her, and yet she should not be allowed to sleep until she had got rid of her wet clothing and until something had been done for her wounded foot. It was indeed an embarrassing situation.

He surveyed her for a few moments wondering how best to begin. Then realizing the necessity for immediate action, he bent over her and woke her up. Again she stared at him in bewilderment until she spoke.

"This is my house," he said, "we are home."

"Home!" sobbed the girl.

"Under shelter, then," said the man. "You are very tired and very sleepy, but there is something to be done; you must take off those wet clothes at once, you must have something to eat, and I must have a look at that foot, and then you can have your sleep out."

The girl stared at him, his program, if a radical one under the circumstances, was nevertheless a rational one, indeed the only one. How was it to be carried out? The man easily divined her thoughts.

"There is another room in this house," he said, "I look in there, he said, "I am going in there now to get you something to eat; meanwhile you must undress yourself and go to bed."

He went to a rude set of box-like shelves draped with a curtain, apparently his own handiwork, against the wall, and brought from it a long and somewhat shapeless woolen gown.

"You can wear this to sleep in," he continued. "First of all, though, I am going to have a look at that foot."

He bent down to where her wounded foot lay extended on the bed.

"Wait," said the girl, lifting herself on her arm, and as she did so he lifted his head and answered her direct gaze with his own. "I am a woman, absolutely alone, entirely at your mercy; you are stronger than I, I have no choice but to do what you bid me. And in addition to the natural weakness of my sex I am the more helpless from this foot. What do you intend to do with me? How do you mean to treat me?"

It was a bold, a splendid question, and it evoked the answer it merited.

"As God is my judge," said the man quietly, "just as you ought to be treated, as I would want another to treat my mother, or my sister, or my wife"—she noticed how curiously his lips suddenly tightened at that word—"if I had one, I never harmed a woman in my life," he continued more earnestly, "only one, that is," he corrected himself, and once again she marked that peculiar contraction of the lips. "And I could not help that," he added.

"I trust you," said the girl at last, after gazing at him long and hard as if to search out the secrets of his very soul. "You have saved my life and things dearer will be safe with you. I have to trust you."

"I hope," came the quick comment, "that it is not only for that. I don't want to be trusted upon compulsion."

"You must have fought terribly for my life in the flood," was the answer. "I can remember what it was now, and you carried me over the rocks, and the mountains without faltering; Only a man could do what you have done. I trust you anyway."

"Thank you," said the man briefly, as he bent over the injured foot again. The boot laced up the front, the short skirt left all plainly visible. With deft fingers he undid the sodden knot and unlaced it, then stood hesitatingly for a moment.

"I don't like to cut your only pair of shoes," he said as he made a slight motion to draw it off, and then observing the spasm of pain, stopped. "Needs must," he continued, taking out his knife and silting the leather.

He did it very carefully so as not to ruin the boot beyond repair, and finally succeeded in getting it off without giving her too much pain. And she was not so tired or so miserable as to be unaware of his gentleness. His manner, matter of fact, business like, if he had been a doctor one would have called it professional, distinctly pleased her in this trying and unusual position. Her stocking was stained with blood. The man rose to his feet, took from a rude home-made chair a light Mexican blanket and laid it considerably across the girl.

"Now if you can manage to get off your stocking yourself, I will see what can be done," he said, turning away. It was the work of a few seconds for her to comply with his request. Hanging the wet stocking carefully over a chair back, he drew back the blanket a little and carefully inspected the poor little foot. He saw at once that it was not an ordinary sprained ankle, but it seemed to him that her foot had been caught between two tossing logs, and had been badly bruised. It was very painful, but would not take so long to heal as a sprain. The little foot normally so white, was now black and blue and the skin had been roughly torn and broken. He brought a basin of cold water and a towel and washed off the blood, the girl flinching down the pain and successfully getting into his outcrying.

"Now," he said, "you must put on this gown and get into bed. By the time you are ready for it I will have some broth for you and then we will bandage that foot. I shall not come in here for some time, you will be quite alone and safe."

He turned and left the room, shutting the door after him as he went out. For a second time that day Enid Matfield undressed herself and this time nervously and in great haste. She was almost too excited and apprehensive to recall the painful circumstances attendant upon her first disrobing. She said she thought the man absolutely, yet she would not have been human if she had not looked most anxiously toward that closed door. He made plenty of noise in the other room, bustling about as if to reassure her.

She could not rest the weight of her body on her left foot, and getting rid of her wet clothes was a somewhat slow process in spite of her hurry, made more so by her extreme nervousness. The gown he gave her was far too big for her, but soft and warm and exquisitely clean. It draped her slight figure completely. Leaving her sodden garments where they had fallen, for she was not equal to anything else, she wrapped herself in the folds of the big gown and managed to get into bed. For all its rude appearance it was a very comfortable sleeping place; there were springs and a good mattress. The unbleached sheets were clean, although they had been rough dried; there was a delicious sense of comfort and rest in her position. She had scarcely composed herself when he knocked loud upon her door.

"May I come in?" he asked.

When she bade him enter she saw he had in his hand a saucer full of his foot tenderly in his hands.

"I am going to hurt you," he said. "I am going to find out if there is anything more than a bruise, any bones broken."

There was no denying that he did pain her exquisitely.

"I can't help it," he said as she cried aloud, "I have got to see what's the matter. I am almost through now."

"Go on, I can bear it," she said faintly. "I feel so much better, anyway, now that I am dry and warm."

"So far as I can determine," said the man at last, "it is only a bad, ugly bruise; the skin is torn, it has been battered, but it is neither sprained nor broken, and I don't think it is going to be very serious. Now I am going to bathe it in the hottest water you can bear, and then I will bandage it and let you go to sleep."

He went out and came back with a kettle of boiling water, with which he laved again and again the poor, torn, battered little member. Never in her life had anything been so grateful as these repeated applications of hot water. After a while he applied a healing lotion of some kind, then he took his long roll of bandage and wound it dexterously around her foot, not drawing it too close to prevent circulation, but just tight enough for support, then as he finished she drew it back beneath the cover.

"Now," said he, "there is nothing more I can do for you tonight, is there?"

"Nothing."

"I want you to go to sleep now, you will be perfectly safe here. I am going down the canon to search—"

"No," said the girl apprehensively. "I dare not be left alone here; besides I know how dangerous it would be for you to descend the canon in this rain; you have risked enough for me, you must wait until the morning; I shall feel better then."

"But think of the anxiety of your friends."

"I can't help it," was the nervous reply. "I am afraid to be left alone here at night."

Her voice trembled; he was fearful she would have a nervous breakdown. "Very well," he said soothingly, "I will not leave you till the morning."

"I'll make you stay?"

And she was not so tired or so miserable as to be unaware of his gentleness. His manner, matter of fact, business like, if he had been a doctor one would have called it professional, distinctly pleased her in this trying and unusual position. He threw his hand out with a deprecating gesture.

"Are you quite comfortably?"

"Yes."

in this contest. No one connected with this publication will be allowed to become a candidate in this contest or work for contestants.

Votes after being voted cannot be transferred to another. Be sure you know whom you are going to vote for before coming to the ballot box, as the editor or no other person positively will not give you any information on the subject. The keys of the ballot box shall be in possession of the awarding committee during the contest.

For the first thirty days the paper will run a 25-vote coupon which can be voted free for any lady contestant.

Contest to run not less than 90 days. Closing of contest will be announced 25 days in advance of closing. The right to postpone date of closing is reserved if sufficient cause should occur.

The contest shall close on a day which will be announced later. 10 days prior to closing contest, the judges will carefully lock or seal ballot box and take same to a bank, where the same will be in a place where voting can be done during business hours and locked in a vault at night until close of contest, when the judges will take charge and count the votes and announce in their turn the names of the ladies winning.

The last ten days all voting must be done in a sealed box at the bank. If you do not wish any one to know whom you are voting for, place your cash for subscriptions together with your coupons, in an envelope which will be furnished you, seal it and put same in ballot box. This will give every one a fair and square deal.
